So don't limit the internet download speed in the different battle.net at 500 kb/s should fix this problem completely. We're currently investigating a question affecting game patches, which can result in failed or slow attempts. #BlizzCS – Blizzard CS European Union (@BlizzardCSEU_EN) March 27, 2020 If the above trick does not work for you, then you can follow the below steps in order to solve the problem. 1. Change the Account/Region to Launch Battle.net first client on your PC. Select Call of Duty: Modern Warfare from the left pane. Now click the REGION / ACCOUNT section. Here you can try to change your region to America or Asia in order to fix the problem. Once done, restart your computer and launch battle.net again & check for the download. If that was the main issue in your case, make sure to change the region back to default once the download completes. 2. Restart Battle.net Client If the above method won't work for you, make sure to restart the client Battle.net too. Some times, the temporary cache or any system glitch can cause downloading problems. 3. Set Game Updates in Battle.net launch Battle.net & Click Call to Assignments: Modern Warfare from the left. Select Options & Click Game Settings. Select the Games Install/Update option on the left pane. Head over to the Automatic Updates option. Choose me when games automatically start the upgrade. Then select Select latest updates and download future patch data for recently played games. Click Done. That's it, guys. Page last updated by downdetector.com Activation / Infinite WardCall of Duty: Warzone just released patch 1.18.0 today for all users. With this update, many users reported their download could start downloading to the client Battle.net. We have a potential fix for this in case you still have problems. Call of Duty: Warzone Update by downloading your Region SolutionSwitch / Considering the main screen Battle.net game, select Call of Duty: MW from the left menu. In the bottom middle of your screen, you will see an area that says REGION/ACCOUNT. Many players who reported this question were in the European region. If you change your region in America, that could solve your questions and force your update to start downloading. If you have this problem with regions you set up in America, try switching to Europe. Once you download the completion of completely your game updates, change your region back to normal. You may have to download a patch after you open up the game. Some reported ones needed to change the regions to download that patch as well and then change the regions back after it's finished. Restart Battle.net client If you tried the above solution and still can't download the Call of Duty: update Warzone, try to restart the client Battle.net. Once this is done, try the above fix again and see if that solves your problem. Check Bandwidth Network in Battle.net Click on Call of Assignments: MW from the left menu again, and go up to Options and then game settings. From here, select the Games Install/Update menu on the left and down at the bottom of the page. Make sure that under Automatic Updates your settings look like this: These are now only three fixes we've seen work for this issue.
